

The Center for the Study of American Politics is hosting a new seminar series in 2017-2018:

The American & Comparative Political Behavior Workshop

Organized by Political Science Professors Alan Gerber and Susan Stokes, this workshop is focused on political behavior broadly considered and invites speakers from a range of social science fields.

The workshop series will be held on selected Fridays from 12:00-1:15 p.m. at the Institution for Social and Policy Studies (ISPS), 77 Prospect Street, Room A002. Lunch will be served.

This workshop is open to Yale faculty, postdocs, graduate and professional students.

SEMINAR SCHEDULE 2017-2018

- NOV 17 Robb Willer, Sociology, Stanford University
"Bridging the Divide: Can Effective Political Communication Reduce Polarization?"
- DEC 1 Francesco Trebbi, Vancouver School of Economics, University of British Columbia
"Making Policies Matter: Voter Responses to Campaign Promises"
- JAN 26 Jennifer Richeson, Psychology, Yale University
"Racial and Political Dynamics of an Approaching 'Majority-Minority' United States"
- FEB 9 Vicky Fouka, Political Science, Stanford University
"From Immigrants to Americans: Race, Status and Assimilation during the Great Migration"
- FEB 23 Leonie Huddy, Political Science, Stony Brook University
"Partisan Sorting and the Feminist Gap in American Politics"
- APR 6 James Sidanius, Psychology and African American Studies, Harvard University
"Social Dominance Theory and the Dynamics of Gendered Prejudice"
- APR 27 Adam Berinsky, Political Science, Massachusetts Institute for Technology (MIT)
"Rumors, Truth and Reality: Political Misinformation in the Modern Age"

More information at <http://csap.yale.edu/behavioral-sciences-workshop>.